A MINDSHIFT PSYCHOLOGICAL SERVICES GUIDE

Guiding & Managing Daily Anxiety & Stress

Small, sustainable rhythms for the everyday weight, not just the big moments.

Daily Stress Isn't the Enemy, Overflow Is

NOTICE THE DIFFERENCE

NOTES & REFLECTION

YOUR RHYTHM

Micro-Practices for Morning, Midday & Evening

Morning: set the tone (2-5 minutes)

- Before checking your phone, take 5 slow breaths and name one thing you're looking forward to.

Midday: interrupt the buildup

- Step away from your desk, stretch, or step outside for two minutes between tasks, this resets your nervous system before stress compounds.

Evening: drain the bucket

- Do a 60-second brain dump of tomorrow's worries onto paper, so your mind doesn't have to hold them overnight.

NOTES & REFLECTION

Which of these three moments (morning, midday, evening) is hardest for you right now?

Protect Your Bucket With Values

1. Name a value this stressor is bumping up against (rest, connection, health, focus).
2. Decide one boundary that protects that value this week.
3. Choose one plain-language sentence to communicate it ("I can't take that on right now.").

Write the boundary sentence you're choosing this week, and the value it protects.

Sleep, Movement & Nourishment

- Sleep: a consistent wake time does more for mood regulation than a consistent bedtime.
- Movement: even a 10-minute walk lowers circulating stress hormones.
- Nourishment: skipped meals mimic anxiety symptoms, low blood sugar and a racing heart feel a lot alike.
- Caffeine: notice if your “anxious afternoon” lines up with your last cup of coffee.

Which basic (sleep, movement, food, caffeine) is most out of balance for you right now?
